COUNTRESS OF YARMOUTH SEEKS ANNULMENT OF HER MARRIAGE

SENSATIONAL CHARGES BY EARL'S WIFE

World-Wide Scandal is Theatened in Suit by Harry Thaw's Sister.

SECRETS ARE GUARDED

LONDON, Jan. 4. A world-wide scandal is likely to follow the suit for the annulment of her marriage filed by the Countess of Yarmouth, sister of Harry K. Thaw, with a view to her being declared sole heiress of the Yarmouth estate.

It means the end of another international scandal, when a famous actress exchanged for a title, and the end is the same as those which have preceded it. The Countess of Yarmouth, sister of Harry K. Thaw, has long been known as the woman who was the victim of a scandal which she has now tried to settle by a suit for annulment of her marriage.

Have Lived Apart.
As a matter of fact, they have not lived together for some time. The Countess has been in practical seclusion since she returned from New York at the conclusion of the first trial of her brother for the murder of Stanford White, while the Earl has been traveling the Continent, living in a lavish manner on the money which he secured from her marriage.

While lawyers for both sides are maintaining the greatest secrecy regarding the charges brought by the Countess, she has declared that she is the most educated and refined woman in the world, and that she is a woman of high social position and that she is a woman of high social position and that she is a woman of high social position.

Dissemination After Law Trial.
Upon her return to London she was cordially greeted by the Earl and the members of his family, but a few days later rumors of family dissension were spread and Yarmouth retired to France. The Countess remained at her home in London, but she was not seen for some time. It is said that she is a woman of high social position and that she is a woman of high social position.

The Earl's standing abroad has been of a high character and he has been for many years one of the most popular of the English nobles. The Countess, on the other hand, has been for many years one of the most popular of the English nobles. The Countess, on the other hand, has been for many years one of the most popular of the English nobles.

Unhappiness Was Predicted.
The match between the couple was not a popular one, and it was predicted by many that it would not last. The Countess, on the other hand, has been for many years one of the most popular of the English nobles. The Countess, on the other hand, has been for many years one of the most popular of the English nobles.

Harry Thaw announced that he was to be best man at the wedding and a few days later to the marriage. RICH FARMER MURDERED BY EGGMEN?

Entire Population of Maine
Village in All Night
Hunt for Him.

EAST RAYMOND ALARMED

EAST RAYMOND, Me., Jan. 4.—The entire population of this village is alarmed by the disappearance of a wealthy farmer, who is reported to have been killed by a party of eggmen.

The case is one of the most sensational that has been known in this State. The farmer, who is reported to have been killed by a party of eggmen, is a wealthy man who has been in the village for many years.

Some time later, when the farmer was alone in his house, he was killed by a party of eggmen. The case is one of the most sensational that has been known in this State.

Victim of Vegg Band.
Unable to find her husband, Mrs. Brown notified the neighbors and a search was made. The search was unsuccessful and the farmer was reported to have been killed by a party of eggmen.

Mr. Brown often carried out sums of money with him and there is a strong suspicion that the eggmen were the cause of his death.

Drag Lake This Afternoon.
The search for the farmer has been continued. The search was unsuccessful and the farmer was reported to have been killed by a party of eggmen.

MILE A MINUTE TO BEDSIDE OF WIFE

LEE, Jan. 4. Robert D. Lee, New York millionaire and owner of one of the best homes in the Berkshire Hills, was yesterday warned of the danger of a mile a minute drive to his home in Lee, N.Y., in his way to New York, where his wife is said to be ill.

Mr. Lee was at Great Barrington when he received the news of his wife's illness and he immediately telephoned to the station master at Lee, and ordered a special train from New York to New York, N.Y., to be sent to Lee, N.Y., at a speed of 100 miles an hour.

The road agent immediately. A great effort was made to get the train to Lee, N.Y., at a speed of 100 miles an hour. The road agent immediately. A great effort was made to get the train to Lee, N.Y., at a speed of 100 miles an hour.

What the World Owes to Mothers of Men Who Made History

NO. XVI.—THE MOTHER OF THOMAS GRAY.

[illegible]

Golden Son's Work
AMONG the world's imperishable literature, "The Song of the Rieger in a Country Churchyard," and it is as sure as anything can be that lost for the poet's mother that immortal poem would never have been written.

The only one of Twain's children to live, Tishie, was the subject of the Autobiography, a work of affection for which his sensitive father craved, and the guardianship that, rather in particularistic turn of mind rendered necessary.

Flawless Devotion

FROM ALL accounts the poet's mother was a woman to blame the average woman of her day in irretrievable strength and independence of character. She was a woman of her faith in her faith in him and her devotion to him were drawn from the same source.

Early in life Gray fell and expressed the conviction that he possessed poetical ability and that the Muses had something to say to him.

The world laughed at him, but the poet never discouraged him and told him to persevere.

From a mere boy Gray was given to Gray fully appreciated his mother's love and was able to do so.

It was his mother who was able to mention his name after her death without tears.

"I can have but one mother," he said to Gray.

Stowe Pacific after his mother's death, and showing the disposition to do so as much as might be, he was asked to write a number of words, which he examined.

Mr. Thoughts now signify nothing to him.

He was thinking of his dead mother.

DO CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN?

No—But They Make the NOBLEMAN and the EMPEROR

THE KAISER IN UNIFORM IN PLAIN CLOTHES

You, who have thought about greatness and what impresses men, will be interested in these two pictures of the German Emperor. The one in uniform shows him dressed up in one of the innumerable suits of fancy clothes that he possesses.

The other picture, with the cap and the left hand in the trousers pocket, is a reproduction of a photograph taken the other day in England. This photograph of the Emperor in civilian costume was taken as he was walking along with an English nobleman—the latter, by the way, carrying the Emperor's overcoat.

It is interesting to study the effect of these two pictures on the mind. The picture in uniform would be picked out by almost anybody as that of an Emperor or something like that.

The other picture would be identified by intelligent men as the picture of a man with self-confidence, force—but not as all an extraordinary man. Tailors would identify that picture as the picture of a man pretty badly dressed.

It seems hard to believe that these two photographs represent the same individual. And it seems hard to realize how great a part costume has played in the history of the world, how much it has been able to dominate men's minds.

Napoleon declaring himself Emperor, with his wonderful crown and yards of brilliant velvet in his trailing, richly embroidered robe, was very different to look at from the hatch-faced, thin, sallow little creature afflicted with the itch and busy thrashing the Austrians in Italy a few years before.

Yet the plain little man in Italy was really a bigger man than the man in the velvet cloak—he wasn't so near the end of his power.

Clothes do not make a MAN, but they do make a nobleman or an Emperor, in the estimation of the people. They have done a great deal to keep up the respect felt by the mob for Emperors and other rulers, spiritual as well as temporal. It was one of the wisest and greatest of the Popes that most ably explained the importance of costume in differentiating one class from another and inspiring respect.

In connection with these two pictures, we should advise our intelligent readers to read Carlyle's great book, "Sartor Resartus," if they haven't already read it. It is heavy, but all of it is wonderful. It is a book of "clothes philosophy," and deals casually with all things under the sun.

Campaign Clubs Next!

By C. B. Quincy

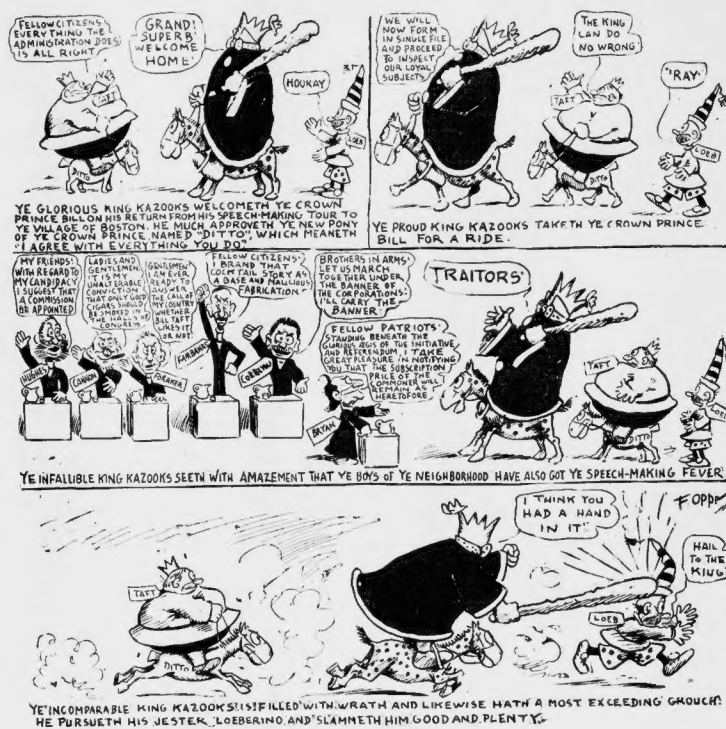

A Fairbanks club, composed of men over six feet tall, has been organized.

HAVE you seen the club they've started out in Indiana? Every man is six feet tall and shaped like a banana. Every man is six feet tall, and long and lean and husky. But the Irish are big as pumpkins and they'll take no hunky-panky. Every man for Fairbanks, the famous bear hunter. And every man drinks hibernian, not a single one a hoser. Oh, the club will work for Fairbanks, from street parades to shopping. And when they're full of hibernian they'll sure set things a-shopping.

THERE'S another club of voters they've got in Cincinnati. And the figure of each member is like an oyster pater. The smallest man that's in it is a good three-hundred-pounder. And every man's for Tull, the greatest living "rounder." "Burrah for Good Old Bull!" they cry when the club goes out parading. And when they hear it come again the roadway needs re-paving. A mighty club the Tull Club, I tell you, things go booming. When down the sidewalk sounds the cry, "The elephants are coming!"

AND many other clubs there are to boost some favorite member. And bring him first beneath the wire along in next November. The D (dash) Boys for Cannon, the Light Weight boost for Knox. The High Finical Magnates about for Cretely by proxy. There are clubs of lights and heavies and slims and things to boost. To boom the various boosters of their favorite ones or counts. But, alas! a Whirling Whiskers Club is allowed on condition. For Hughes assigns his boost to a Trip to Boston.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox

She Gives Some Sound Advice to Married People on Love and Obedience of Children and Parents

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1907, by American Journal Editors

IF YOU MARRIED a woman who was a brute or a dishonest man, abusing his family or cheating his neighbor, I would tell him quietly and plainly that I disapproved of his methods, and I would beg him to reform. I would do all in my power to help him to be a better man, but I would not let him pretend to respect or a love which his conduct rendered it impossible for me to feel. A young girl who was not long ago that her mother reviewed men and their faults, and during her father's absence, she was four years old, and her mother cautioned her not to let her father. The young girl felt instinctively that the conduct of her mother was not right, and begged me to tell her what to do. I advised her to say to her mother that she would be obliged to leave a home where she was subjected to such an example, and that she should go away into service if her mother refused to remain under such an influence. The more fact that this woman brought her daughter into the world is not sufficient reason why the daughter should reverence, love and obey such a mother.

"Tantrums"

ANOTHER girl begged me with tears to write about a mother who had what she described as "tantrums." Translated the word meant spells of violent temper and hysterical outbursts. If a member of the family was late at meals, or if the father talked longer with his children than with their mother, the woman would have "tantrums," making everybody utterly wretched, and never receiving from them until she had compelled each member of the family to ask her pardon.

A Few Rules

REGARDING my advice to married people, it is this, and always has been and always will be: Use every effort to make marriage a success. Be considerate, patient, amiable and forgiving; yield small points and avoid argument. Study your wife or husband with loving eyes and heart, and make happiness in the home your leading purpose in life. Consider all sexual attractions outside your own home vulgar and unworthy temptations of your base nature and endeavor to subvert yourself into a noble and worthy character. Ask your partner to join with you in this aim. If after due trial your efforts are unavailing, if your partner in the marriage is a brute, or a dishonest man, or a man who is unworthy to be the head of the household, then I say ever the contract and go away. A quarrelsome, loveless home is a hell upon earth. No one has a right to force another to stay in it.
